

SWAKOPMUND'S LIGHTHOUSE

One of the most prominent landmarks in Swakopmund is certainly the towering lighthouse! It has a history of rugged resilience to the ebb and flow of the powerful Atlantic Ocean.

The first lighthouse was established on the Mole. Despite intentions of creating a sheltered port, the little beacon could not weather the storms of the crashing Atlantic. Sadly, the little beacon was washed away not long after its construction.

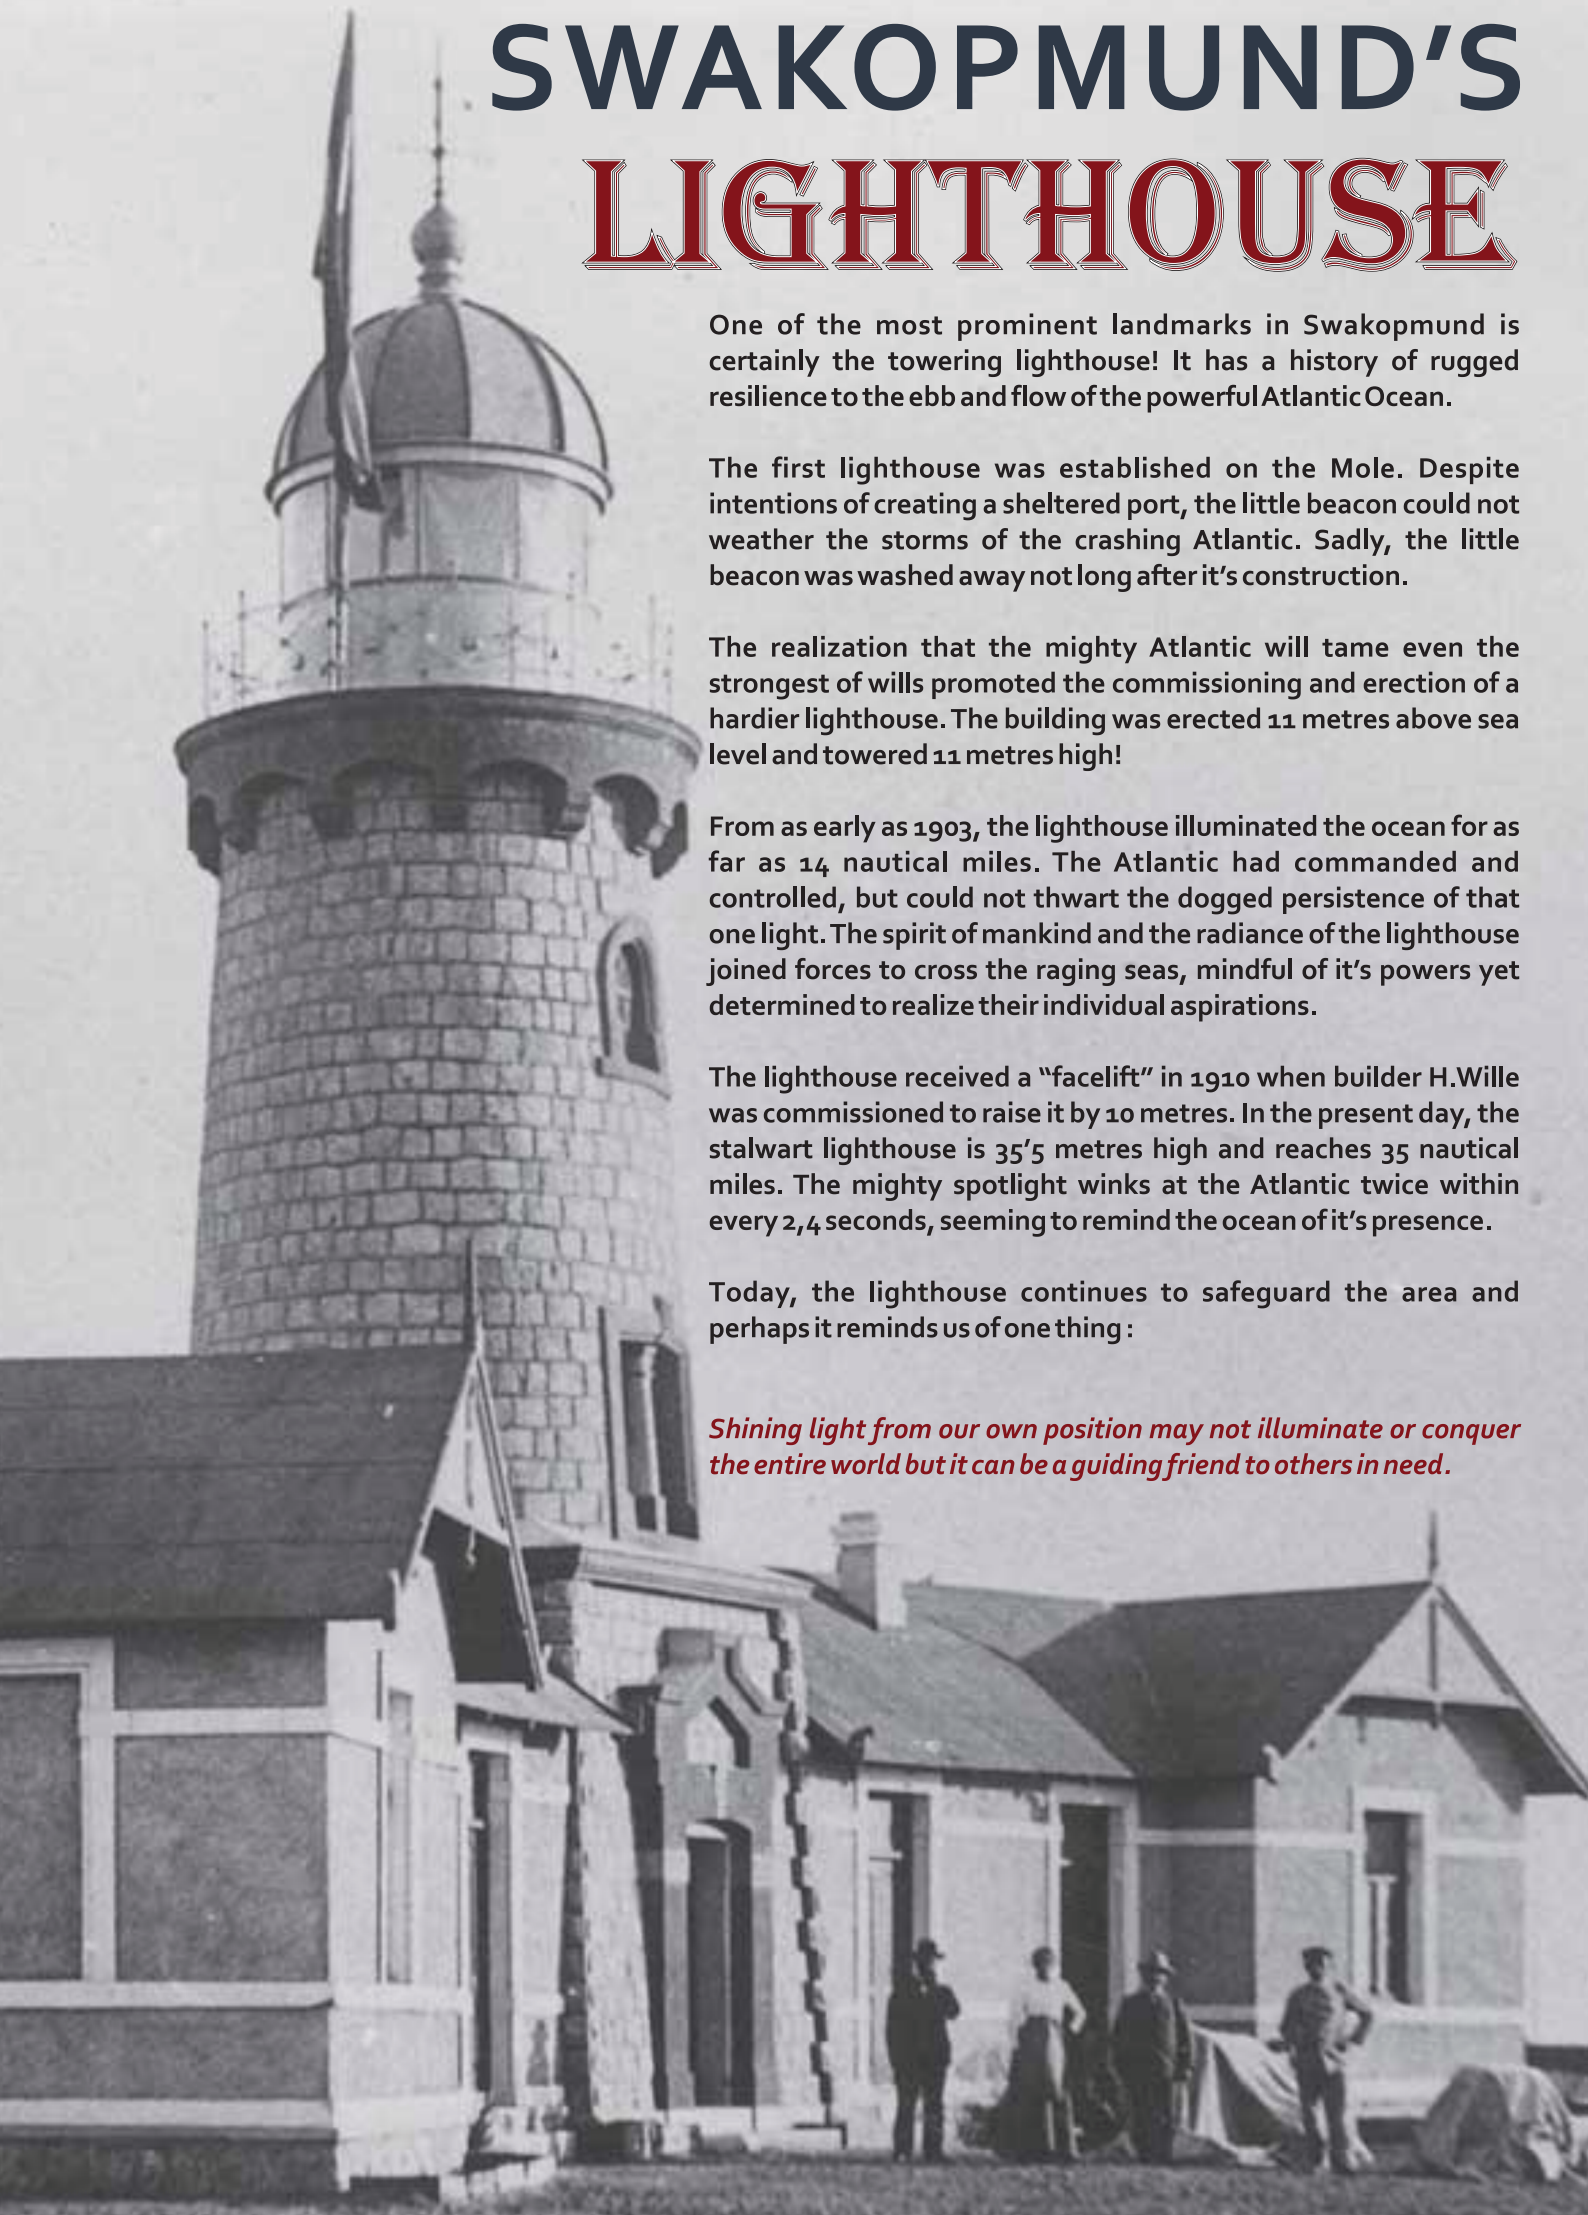

The realization that the mighty Atlantic will tame even the strongest of wills promoted the commissioning and erection of a hardier lighthouse. The building was erected 11 metres above sea level and towered 11 metres high!

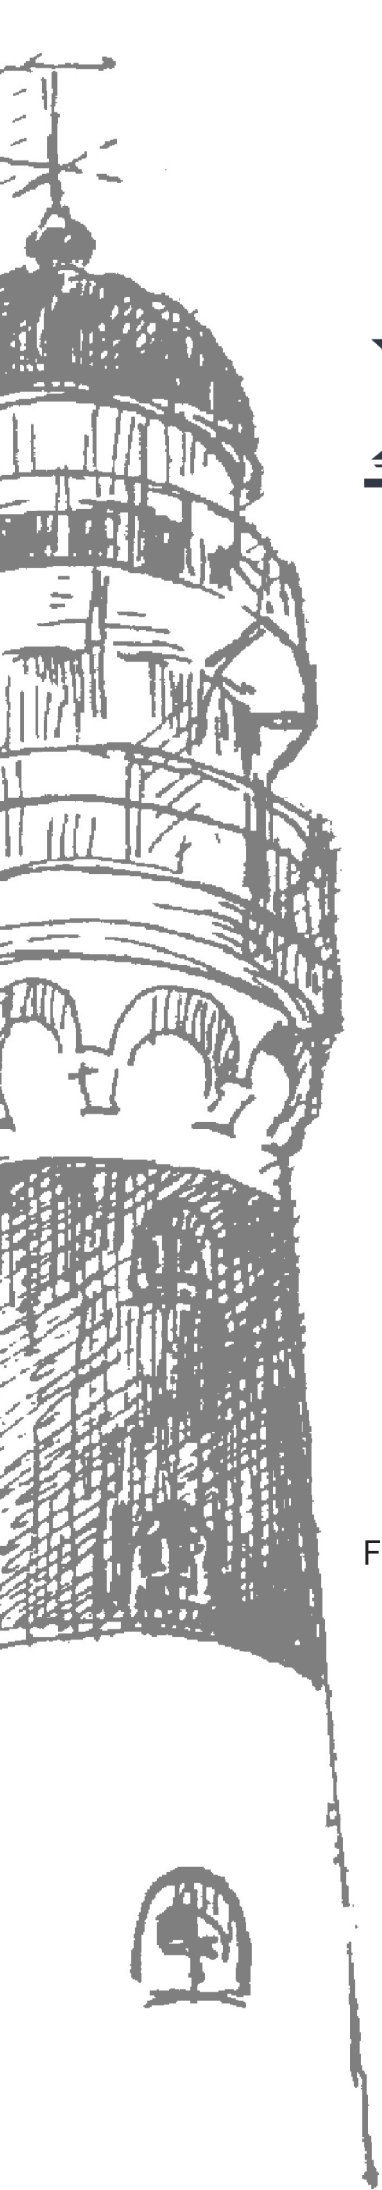

From as early as 1903, the lighthouse illuminated the ocean for as far as 14 nautical miles. The Atlantic had commanded and controlled, but could not thwart the dogged persistence of that one light. The spirit of mankind and the radiance of the lighthouse joined forces to cross the raging seas, mindful of its powers yet determined to realize their individual aspirations.

The lighthouse received a "facelift" in 1910 when builder H.Wille was commissioned to raise it by 10 metres. In the present day, the stalwart lighthouse is 35'5 metres high and reaches 35 nautical miles. The mighty spotlight winks at the Atlantic twice within every 2,4 seconds, seeming to remind the ocean of its presence.

Today, the lighthouse continues to safeguard the area and perhaps it reminds us of one thing:

Shining light from our own position may not illuminate or conquer the entire world but it can be a guiding friend to others in need.
